CEPA Member Feature

In May 1971, Bob Thompson founded RW Thompson, Inc. when he recognized Denver's explosive growth would create a demand for his unique expertise in geotechnical engineering, particularly expansive soils. Though Bob was relatively young back then, he was already an expert, thanks to the teachings of his mentor, geotechnical engineering pioneer Fu Hua Chen. Some of you might recognize him; ACEC offers a scholarship bearing his name, and he is behind some of Denver's most notable early developments, including Denver's Prudential Plaza and the Denver Center for the Performing Arts.

Matt joined the company in 2004, when at least a third of our environmental work was mold-related. Up until the early aughts, crawl spaces and foundations containing wood components were built above bare soil because "Denver has a dry climate." Turns out mold finds a way, and indoor air quality (IAQ), industrial hygiene or mold issues — the terms overlap — became a big part of our work.
